The downpour on the last day of athletics was no problem for some, but too much for others

Team Americas snatched a victory in the girls and boys medley relay event, winning gold in both races by a single second yesterday evening.

The first of its kind, the medley relay saw runners from the five continents pitted against each other in a team event where each ran in legs of 100m, 200m, 300m and 400m.

Robin Reynolds from the USA gained her second gold of the Games, having won the 400m event earlier in the week. The wet weather turned out to be a blessing for her.

"The rain did not affect my performance. I ran even faster because I wanted to get out of the water," she said. The team, also comprising Myasia Jacobs (USA), Rashan Brown and Tynia Gaither of the Bahamas, managed a timing of 2min 5.62sec.

Recently titled the fastest boy in the world, Odane Skeen ran for the boys team who clinched the gold in the boys event. Odane said that the rain did not affect his performance.

"It was just pretty cold and I had to keep warm," he added. The boys race also saw a rematch between David Bolarinwa (Europe) and Masaki Nashimoto (Asia), who had gone against each other just two days ago in the 100m blue ribbon event. Europe finished second, while Asia came in last. The rain did not adversely affect his race, David said.

"(I am) absolutely satisfied with my performance."

In the 1000m steeplechase finals earlier in the evening, it was a double victory for Kenyans Virginia Nyambura and Peter Matheka Mutuku. They were clear favourites going into the event, having qualified at the top of their groups. Despite the rain, both Virginia and Peter registered personal best timings to bag the gold medals.

"The race is a tradition for Kenya and I must win," Peter said. On the field, it was a shock victory for Spaniard Didac Salas in the boys pole vault A final. Together with Brazilian Thiago Da Silva, they were the only ones to clear the 5m mark. Thiago said: "It was scary. I was afraid that the pole might slip off from my hand because it was slippery."

"The rain has helped me in winning," he said without elaborating.

Besting his own personal timing, bronze medallist Greek Theodoros Chrysanthopoulos acknowledged that he was "not used to competing in rainy conditions."

Other athletes struggled with the wet conditions. It was rain on his parade for pre-event favourite pole vaulter Ivan Horvat of Croatia. All medallists cleared at least 4.95m, while Ivan only managed 4.7m after struggling with slippery grip, finishing last.

In the 1960 Rome Olympic Games, two close friends Rafer Johnson of USA and Yang Chuankwong of Taiwan mesmerised the world as they competed fiercely in the exhausting decathlon. Many competitors embrace in mutual respect at the end of the gruelling 1500m event.

The youth, our hope for the future

BY ASHLEY MAK

Dear youths, the world needs you to save it. And the Games could be the first step. Youths are our hope for the future. You do not need to be a politician or world leader – you already have the power. Like Neo from The Matrix, your generation might be The One to save us. Call me a geek but I reckon the Internet is your weapon of choice. There is no better time, with the world so interconnected and no better place than the Internet to let your ideas be heard by the masses.

Charlie McDonnell, shaved his head live on the Internet to raise funds for Cancer Research UK on his 18th birthday. He raised £5,000 in donations from his viewers on YouTube. The Internet is your platform.

Online petitions can help world leaders make better decisions – such as reducing poverty and hunger, fighting AIDS, and protecting human rights. These are issues that many feel the youth of today do not care about. But the truth is far from it. There are many, like Charlie McDonnell, who wish for world peace.

Contrary to popular belief that the Internet is evil, it really is more like a community, the foundation of which is friendship. This is why social media is important in spreading ideas effectively. The movie “Inception” said that an idea is like a virus, resilient and highly contagious. An idea is a powerful seed that grows into action.

This is also why you should make as many friends as you can during the YOG. Stay in touch and share your ideas. In the future, you might just solve the world’s problems together, with the Olympic friendships that you made.

GU POWER TO 4-0 VICTORY

BY CLARA CHAN
AND LAI JUNJIE

Chinese paddler Gu Yuting took home the women’s singles gold yesterday as she battled Singaporean Isabelle Li aside with a 4-0 victory with no reply.

Yuting continued her winning streak after her 4-1 victory against South Korea’s Yang Ha Eun earlier in the day, winning the four sets 11-8, 11-5, 11-8, 11-9.

Touted as the player to watch prior to the start of the Games, Yuting certainly lived up to the hype. Calm and focused, her powerful smashes and aggressive style of play proved too much for Isabelle to handle.

Despite winning the gold, Yuting was not too pleased with her performance, lamenting the errors that she made, especially during the early stages of the game. “Because I was nervous, there were a few times I missed the ball when I should have obviously caught it,” she said.

Silver medallist Isabelle can keep her head high despite failing to deliver what would have been Singapore’s first gold medal. The packed stadium, which included Prime Minister Lee Hsien Loong, rose to its feet after the match in a rousing round of applause.

Singapore Youth Olympic Games Organising Committee chairman Ng Ser Miang praised and congratulated Isabelle on her accomplishment. “She has done very well at the first Youth Olympic Games,” he said. “We are very proud of her.”

Isabelle is undeterred by her defeat, choosing to look forward and work towards achieving her goal of playing at the 2016 Summer Olympic Games. “(I’m) very excited at the first Youth Olympic Games,” she said. “We are very happy as he is a good fight.”

Bulgaria

A NATURAL TALENT

BY DEBORAH LEE

Merely 20 days from picking up weightlifting, Boyanka Kostova of Bulgaria won her first national championship. She was 12 then. Now five years on, 17-year-old Boyanka has become the first weightlifting gold medallist in the Girls’ Under 53kg category of the Youth Olympic Games (YOG).

With all eyes on her to bring home the gold, Boyanka did not disappoint. Tough competition was expected from Russia and Ukraine, who are traditional weightlifting powerhouses. But with 192kg, Boyanka soared ahead of silver medallist, Kuo Hsing Chun of Chinese Taipei, who only managed to lift 174kg.

At only 152cm, the petite individual brushed off her competition. “It was not difficult to beat them,” she says matter-of-factly.

Currently, she is competing at the senior level against athletes who are much older than her. Recently at the 2010 European Weightlifting Championships held in Belarus in April, Boyanka managed 199kg and took home silver in a similar category. She considers that and the Games as the highlights of her sporting career so far.

Born in Kenya, Wilson Kipketer became a Danish citizen in 1990. He represented Denmark at the 2000 and 2004 Olympics, claiming a silver and bronze respectively.

“I was pushed by myself because I have my own rule, and that is that every day I run faster, and try harder.”
— Kipketer when asked if prize money motivated his running.
It was Boyanka’s uncle, a former weightlifting world champion, who first piqued her interest in weightlifting. Just before the games, he had wished her success in becoming the first gold medallist for the event.

As soon as Boyanka returns home, she intends to show her medal to her family and friends.

It is not by luck that Boyanka has reached her current status as a weightlifting champion. The gold medallist is a firm believer of self-improvement. She says: “It is important and helpful to compete in as many competitions as possible. That way, I can study to become a better weightlifter.”

For Boyanka, losing weight and maintaining her weight before every match is the hardest thing to do. “I usually have to reduce my weight by 3 or 4 kilograms,” says Boyanka. To do so, she keeps to a diet of salad and meat as her source of protein. Because of the humidity in Singapore, Boyanka has had to drink copious amounts of water to prevent dehydration. But water retention has made her weight increase, forcing her to put in even greater effort to keep her weight down.

After the YOG, Boyanka will start preparing for the qualification rounds of the Olympics. She hopes to etch her name in history once again by emerging champion at the London Olympics in 2012.

“IT IS IMPORTANT AND HELPFUL TO COMPETE IN AS MANY COMPETITIONS AS POSSIBLE. THAT WAY, I CAN STUDY TO BECOME A BETTER WEIGHTLIFTER.”

Marlene Gomez fears heights, but the German triathlete stepped up to the challenge of scaling a 36m high inverse tower. She managed to conquer about two-thirds of the wooden structure, when most of the other athletes fell out long before. The inverse tower comprises a series of vertical obstacles like a rope ladder, rock climb, and a series of large logs the athletes have to navigate.

Marlene Gomez was one of approximately 200 athletes who went on the island adventure to Pulau Ubin on Sunday. The island adventure, highly popular among the athletes, was held at the Outward Bound Singapore campsite. Participants went through four different elements of outdoor activities — the inverse tower, raft building, rowing, and team games.

The number of participants per session went beyond the original limit of 144 to 200 to cope with the increase in demand.

“Very proud of myself. I was nervous about falling but I wanted to challenge myself,” said the 17-year-old, who added that she felt safe with her teammates belaying her and directing her. “I want to do it again. It was a fun experience, because they all supported me,” she said.

For most of the athletes, ascending the inverse tower was a new experience, having never tried anything like it in their home country. Many were apprehensive before climbing the tower. Jalil Salmon, a runner who hails from Antigua and Barbuda, said: “There’s always the thought: What if I fall? But I just ignored it and climbed.”

Athletes also built rafts in teams of 12 to 14 from rope, plastic tubes and large plastic barrels. Instructors introduced the basic structure of rafts and taught them how to tie knots. After the construction, the athletes put their work to the test and paddled the rafts out to sea.

“It tests your character and leadership,” said South African swimmer Pierre Keune, as he worked with his teammates to tie the frame of the raft together.

The rowing activity proved to be a challenge for some athletes such as Heshan Unamboowe, who deemed it “more challenging than swimming”. The activity saw about seven athletes rowing out together to retrieve a flag in the sea.

Said the Sri Lankan swimmer: “Rowing under the sun was quite tough. It definitely wasn’t as easy as I expected but we managed to communicate well and work together. I enjoyed every minute of it.”

A series of team games had athletes working together to accomplish tasks, such as guiding a blindfolded partner through a series of obstacles and trying to jump rope simultaneously as a team. The participants whooped enthusiastically and exchanged hugs upon successfully completing each stage, in a show of solidarity.

The island adventure received a decisive stamp of approval from five time Olympian and Olympic silver medalist Charmaine Crooks. She lauded the lessons which athletes would take away from their time on the island and at the Youth Olympic Games.

The Canadian runner said the activities might not have been easy, with the circumstances not always under control, but it was “all about supporting one another”.

Outward bound professional Mr Sin Soon Ho said: “The adventure aims to perpetuate the Olympic values while showing a different side of Singapore.”

“We cooperated and worked together even though we are all from different countries. There was no language barrier.”

Oliver Hegi

GYMNASTICS, SWITZERLAND

For Swiss gymnast Oliver Hegi, a score difference of 0.05 cost him a place in the Singapore Youth Olympic Games Men’s Artistic Gymnastics finals.

The 17-year-old made his first blunder when he fell during the floor exercise of the preliminary round. He was conscious not to commit any more mistakes. Unfortunately, he fell again during the parallel bars event.

Though upset, the gymnast remained hopeful. He said: “I pray that I could get into the finals till the end.”

And when he found out he did not get past the qualification rounds, his first thought was that he wanted to go home.

He was ranked 19th with a score of 81.00, a mere 0.05 below Amr Ahmed from Egypt. Only the best 18 gymnasts will proceed to the Individual All-Around Finals.

Missing the qualifications for the finals by just one position must have been heart wrenching for Oliver. But throughout the interview, his positive outlook was apparent. And that cheerful demeanour proved him a winner in his own right.

Oliver took up gymnastics when he was seven because his brother started doing it and it seemed “fun”. He quipped: “The way it looks like, it’s like you’re flying in the air!”

As the winner of two silver medals in the European Gymnastics Championships (Juniors) earlier this year, he is naturally disappointed about his performance in the Games. But he took it the right way, with an optimistic attitude to boot.

“Tennis is my life. And I think you need to always believe in yourself.”

GYMNASTICS, GREECE

Greek gymnast, Apostolos Koustavas, 16, who specialises in trampoline, came close to holding a medal. But he only managed to secure a fourth placing in the trampoline event.

“Getting the fourth placing in the first Youth Olympic Games is something really a great achievement for me. Of course, I’m a little disappointed since I’ve come so close to getting a medal,” said Apostolos.

In the second routine of the qualifying round, Apostolos had a mishap that caused him to slip from the排名.

Undeterred, he continue giving his best efforts till the end of the competition.

When quizzed about his feelings after the slip, Apostolos shared: “I personally did not think I could go qualify for the finals. But when I had the chance to go to the finals, I wanted to do my best.”

Despite being the youngest participant in his category at the Youth Olympic Games 2010, he sees this challenge as a motivation for him to do his best.

He will be participating in the Junior European Championships next year at Birmingham, which is also the qualifying competition for the London Olympic Games 2012.

Again, he will be the youngest participant in the trampoline event at the age of 17.

Apostolos is honoured to be the first torch-bearer in the first Youth Olympic Games, and is happy that the experience at the Games has given him the opportunity to mingle with other athletes from around the world.

The Chinese girls relay team, made up of Bai Anqi, Liu Lan (pictured at right), Tang Yi and Wang Chang, was also disappointed after being disqualified from their 4 x 100m medley relay final.

Liu Lan, who made a false start in the third leg of the medley event, blamed herself for the disqualification. But her teammates and her coach encouraged her to learn from the mistake.

“My coach said that all athletes make mistakes, and it so happened that my mistake was during this event.”
