

National Institute of Education to get new director

Toh Ting Wei

A new director will head the National Institute of Education (NIE) from July 1, Nanyang Technological University (NTU) announced yesterday.

Professor Christine Goh, current dean of graduate studies and professional learning, will replace Professor Tan Oon Seng.

Prof Tan, 60, will remain as an education professor at NIE, and will be the director of the new Centre for Research in Child Development later this year.

He was appointed NIE director in July 2014, and has been credited with boosting NIE's reputation and programmes during his tenure.

In 2014, Prof Tan received the Public Administration Medal (Silver) in recognition of his contributions to education.

Prof Goh, 60, has been with NIE for the past 24 years and is recognised as an applied linguistics expert for her work in the field. She has advised the Ministry of Education on aspects of English language education and research, and is also a member of the NTU Academic Council's advisory board that advises the university on issues such as new academic programmes.

She said she will look to leverage NIE's strengths to lead the future of teacher and professional education in Singapore and internationally.

Professor Ling San, provost and vice-president (academic) at NTU, said: "Prof Christine Goh brings a fine mixture of professionalism, innovative ideas and academic integrity that makes her ideally qualified to lead the NIE on to further and bigger success in the future."

In other appointments, Professor John Wang, 52, will take over from Prof Goh as the dean of graduate studies and professional learning.

Professor Low Ee Ling will be the dean of teacher education at NIE's Office of Teacher Education, and Professor David Hung will be the dean of education research.

Professor Christine Goh (top) will replace Professor Tan Oon Seng as head of the National Institute of Education.