Introduction to American Literature
Professor Christopher Trigg / cptrigg@ntu.edu.sg

Description

In the second volume of his Autobiography, Benjamin Franklin describes his attempt to achieve “moral perfection.” Having achieved a degree of temperance, frugality, and sincerity, Franklin attempts to acquire a sense of humility. Here he admits failure as regards “the reality of this virtue,” but adds that he managed to cultivate the “appearance” of it.

In this course, we’ll examine the way in which American literary works represent and facilitate personal transformation. Reading a broad range of texts, dating from the colonial era to the present day, we’ll examine different conceptions of self-construction and self-performance. Many of our chosen works will describe moments of conversion or decisive change, from Thoreau’s resolution to resist peacefully his government’s support of slavery to the narrator’s decision, in James Weldon Johnson’s novel, to forgo his black identity and live as an “Ex-Colored Man.” Our survey will conclude with a consideration of autobiographical writings by President Barack Obama and the tweets of President Donald Trump. Here we’ll discuss how American leaders often feel obliged to structure their life-stories according to the popular tropes of conversion and self-creation.
